

ANNA
BELFRAGE

A Newfound Land

*Book four in Anna Belfrage's time slip series,
The Graham Saga, featuring reluctant time traveller
Alex Lind and her 17th century husband, Matthew Graham*

It's 1672, and Matthew Graham and his family have left Scotland. Having taken the drastic decision to leave their homeland, Alexandra and Matthew hope for a simpler, if harsher, life in the wilds of the Colony of Maryland. While Matthew battles constant bouts of homesickness, Alex considers this an opportunity for their numerous family to begin life anew, far removed from the conflicts they left behind in Scotland.

Unfortunately, things don't always turn out as you want them to and the past has a nasty tendency to resurface at the most inappropriate moments. Matters are further complicated by the strained relations between colonists and the Susquehannock Indians. When Matthew intercedes to stop the Burleys from abducting Indian women into slavery he makes lifelong – and deadly – enemies of them all.

Once again Alex is plunged into an existence where death seems to threaten her man wherever he goes. Will Matthew see himself – and his family – safe in these new circumstances? And will the past finally be laid to rest?

About the Author

I was raised abroad, on a pungent mix of Latin American culture, English history and Swedish traditions. As a result I'm multilingual and most of my reading is historical – both non-fiction and fiction. Possessed of a lively imagination, I have drawers full of potential stories, all of them set in the past. I was always going to be a writer – or a historian, preferably both. Ideally, I aspired to becoming a pioneer time traveller, but science has as yet not advanced to the point of making that possible. Instead I ended up with a degree in Business and Finance, with very little time to spare for my most favourite pursuit. Still, one does as one must, and in between juggling a challenging career I raised my four children on a potent combination of invented stories, historical debates and masses of good food and homemade cakes. They seem to thrive...

Nowadays I spend most of my spare time at my writing desk. The children are half grown, the house is at times eerily silent and I slip away into my imaginary world, with my imaginary characters. Every now and then the one and only man in my life pops his head in to ensure I'm still there. I like that – just as I like how he makes me laugh so often I'll probably live to well over a hundred.
