

PAUL LETTERS

A CHANCE KILL

Your enemy's enemy is not your friend...

Based upon true events, seventeen-year-old Polish catholic Dyta Zajac finds herself forced away from wartime Warsaw due to her family's shadowy connections. Dyta's time on the run sets her on a path towards confronting the ultimate Nazi.

Half a continent away, an RAF crew embarks on Britain's little-known first offensive of the war. In a story of fear versus hope, the unspoken limits of loyalty are exposed and the value of a compromised life is contested. Dyta's destiny edges closer to that of the RAF crew – and toward the Allies' most brazen covert operation to strike at the Nazi elite.

Even more dangerous than the enemy, however, is the assumption that your enemy's enemy is your friend...

About the Author

Dealing with a physical disability – twisted and transposed to a character in A Chance Kill – prompted Paul to change his life and give up full-time teaching to write. He studied history, education, international affairs and literary journalism at the Universities of Cardiff, Oxford and Hong Kong. In researching A Chance Kill Paul met with expert historians in Warsaw, Prague and London.

Paul is from England and currently lives in the jungled fringes of Hong Kong. He writes freelance, often for the South China Morning Post, and is working on a World War Two novel set in Hong Kong.

Title	A Chance Kill
Author	Paul Letters
ISBN	978-1-78132-313-7(paperback) 978-1-78132-314-4 (ebook)
RRP	£9.99 (paperback) £4.99 (ebook)
Category	Historical Fiction 203 x 133mm 300 pages

Published by SilverWood Books
Bookseller and library discounts available
Available to order from bookshops, online retailers, and directly from the publisher

